

MRS. RIEHL IS QUESTIONED BY THE PROSECUTOR

In spite of sensational stories that the Hall-Mills murder will be reopened and that the mystery is solved, developments of the past twenty-four hours tend to indicate to the contrary.

Prosecutor Toolan requested Louise Geist Reihl, whose husband alleges she knows something about the case, to visit his office yesterday afternoon. She did so, arriving at the office shortly after 4 o'clock and remaining there until 8 o'clock last night. Prosecutor Toolan, it was said today, learned nothing that would lead to the case being reopened.

She returned home shortly after 8:30 o'clock. She stated that she knew nothing more than she told the prosecutor about the case and had told at the first investigation.

"The story my sister told the prosecutor at the time of the murder is the only story she has ever told. She has been very frank with all of us. If we knew anything that would lead to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who committed the crime we'd gladly give it to the authorities," declared Louise Geist's brother.
